Rangers Apprehend Individual After Goat Haunt Break-In

Multiple Agencies Cooperate Across International Boundary

WEST GLACIER, MONT. – Rangers at Glacier National Park have been involved in an ongoing investigation after Jacqueline Rouleau, age 28, a Canadian citizen, was found in the Goat Haunt Ranger Station bunkhouse. Rouleau had broken into the bunkhouse and was found in the building by a park maintenance worker on the afternoon of October 7. All visitor services had ceased at Goat Haunt on October 5.

The woman was transported to Waterton Townsite where she was met by a U.S. park ranger from Glacier National Park and a Canadian park warden from Waterton Lakes National Park. After initial interviews, she was transported to the Carway Port of Entry, Alberta, Canada, where she was transferred into the custody of Canadian Customs and Royal Canadian Mounted Police officials.

Law enforcement background checks on Rouleau revealed an extensive criminal history and several outstanding warrants totaling over $700,000, in both the United States and Canada, on charges of fraud and money laundering. Rouleau remains in the custody of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on charges of drug trafficking. Rouleau's apprehension is the result of cooperation by several agencies on both sides of the border including the U.S. National Park Service, Canadian Park Service, Canadian Customs, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the U.S. Border Patrol.

The Goat Haunt break-in remains under investigation as part of a larger investigation, therefore, no further details are available.
